

Hey, the 90's called. They want their cable rules back.

Some things look ridiculous as they age — like the 1992 retransmission consent rules. Rules that completely favor broadcasters at the expense of the 90% of consumers who are pay TV subscribers. Rules that have allowed broadcasters to pull the plug on programming 69 times this year and counting. On July 24, at the Senate hearing “The Cable Act at 20”, let’s hope they talk about updating the rules for the 21st century. Anything else would be completely whack.
