

Rules so old they're pre-Jurassic.

Remember that megahit dinosaur movie from 19 years ago? Sadly, it's been even longer since Congress updated retransmission consent rules. Think of all the programming and technology that's been created since then. We're pleased to see today's Senate hearing on the future of online video. Now, it's time for Congress and the FCC to update vintage 1992 retransmission rules that completely favor broadcasters, not the viewing public. Because the era when only three big networks roamed the earth is, well, extinct.
